MEMORANDUM

SUBJECT: Foreign Affairs Executive Seminar

1. Most Agency employees who have been around these halls for five years or more have been exposed to their share of "training" exercises, seminars, executive development sessions, courses, and so forth. Of these, some are excellent, some fair, and some a waste of time. In my view, the Foreign Affairs Executive Seminar, which I attended this September as one of five Agency participants, is among the best. Despite the title, "foreign affairs" is only one aspect of the course, and the inclusion of domestic topics is one of the strengths of the seminar. The mix of people--military, State, USIA, CIA, AID and even HEW--with quite different backgrounds and job experiences is also a strong point. And the chance to read widely and to think without the daily pressures and responsibilities is a very welcome one for most.

2. The seminar has been fortunate in finding a number of provocative and knowledgeable speakers and has shown wisdom in structuring the sessions so that there is maximum time for questions and answers. In looking back at the sessions, I remember in particular:

--Dr. Marion Levy of Princeton, who questioned whether affluence, longevity and technological change really constituted an improvement over the Hobbsian times, when life was "nasty, brutish and short"

- Sidney Jones of Commerce, who gave the most lucid explanation I have heard as to why the US economy is in this lamentable state
- Dr. Max Lerner, who made the group ponder the opposing value systems at war in our society today
- Dr. Andre Hellegers of Georgetown, who wittily addressed the question of population and population control in philosophical as well as practical political terms
- Hon. George Lodge of Harvard, who made the group aware of the intricate and intimate connection between ideology and a nation's capacity to change
- Prof. Marshall Shulman of Columbia, who linked past and present in the Soviet Union in such a way that today's events came into clear focus
- Dr. Price Gittinger of the IBRD, who made us understand the links between wheat, soybeans, rising prices, climate, and foreign economic policy

And there were many other speakers who were equally good, touching on such diverse topics as women, racism, China, domestic politics, the press, foreign aid, NATO, international labor and business, and military issues.

3. The seminar has two other features I consider valuable: the regional seminars and the field trips. In the regional seminars, there is a chance for exchange among experts in a given area and a chance to pursue topics of special interest. In the European seminar, for example, we zeroed in on MBFR, CSCE, and the state of US-European relations. Our State Department man managed to persuade the Minister of the French Embassy, Francois de la Gorce, and Mr. Mitran, First Secretary of the Romanian Embassy, to share their views with us. The field trips--to the Pentagon, the State Department, CIA and the Capitol--were also well planned and useful. The highlight for many was a spontaneous and fervent speech by Hubert Humphrey, who was in such rare good form that he could have won any election hands down that day.

4. Because I see the course as so valuable, particularly for a middle level officer who tends to get in a rut, I wonder if offices throughout the Agency should not be a bit more careful in the selection process. I suspect that information on this course is not widely disseminated in many offices, nor do these offices spend a great deal of time in choosing participants. Instead, the process is probably somewhat haphazard, and those who do go may have learned about FAES by word of mouth and then taken the initiative. "Training" in the broadest sense should be an integral part of career development for all Agency officers, and the FAES should be viewed in that light.

THE FOREIGN AFFAIRS EXECUTIVE SEMINAR

I. OBJECTIVE

The objective of the interdepartmental Foreign Affairs Executive Seminar is to provide an advanced, short-term course on the current formulation, coordination, and execution of U.S. foreign policy to senior foreign affairs executives of U.S. government agencies serving either in the U.S. or abroad.

While the focus of the Seminar is on policy problems in foreign affairs in general, special emphasis is given in the course's regional seminars to a coordinated interagency approach to policy formulation and implementation in Washington and in the field.

In the process of the three week course, the Seminar gives special attention to the Nixon Doctrine, foreign economic and trade policies, domestic factors affecting U.S. foreign policy, and problems of modernization and development.

II. INSTRUCTION

The Seminar draws on the experience of recognized authorities both government and private, Seminar faculty, and the participating senior foreign affairs officials attending the Seminar to broaden the horizons of the participants by making each more aware of the roles and viewpoints of other agencies in foreign policy-making and execution.

The course is organized in such a way as to give primary attention to: (1) a description and analysis of present U.S. foreign policy--in particular at this point in time an elaboration of the Nixon Doctrine and foreign economic and trade policies; (2) the modernization process and problems of stability in both less developed and developed countries; (3) domestic factors affecting U.S. foreign policy formulation and execution; and (4) current foreign policy problems, strategies and perspectives including factors in the international area affecting the formulation and implementation of present U.S. foreign policy. Particular emphasis is placed on the leadership role of the Department of State in foreign policy both in Washington and in the Missions abroad.

The Foreign Affairs Executive Seminar is inter-departmentally staffed and funded. It offers the only short-term interagency training course in which senior officers of U.S. agencies are convened to be informed on, and to exchange ideas on, the factors affecting U.S. foreign policy. The method of instruction combines lectures by recognized national and international experts, seminar discussion, selected topical reading, and visits to various agencies and the Congress.

III. DURATION AND QUALIFICATIONS

It is a three-week seminar with up to 60 participants in attendance. It occurs six times during the course of the calendar year--January, March, May, July, September, and November. Qualifications for attendance are to be an officer from a U.S. government agency in the international relations field with rank of FSO-3 and above, Lt. Colonel and above, Commander and above, or GS-14 and above. Any questions regarding the Foreign Affairs Executive Seminar may be addressed to the offices of the Chairman or Deputy Chairman, Foreign Affairs Executive Seminar, Foreign Service Institute, Department of State (SA-15), Washington, D.C. 20520 or telephone (Area Code 703) 235-9276, 9271, or 9252.
